PGW BRINGS ENERGYSense HOME REBATES TO PHILADELPHIA'S DOORSTEPS

Low cost home energy assessments promoted through new door-to-door initiative, launched in Mt. Airy, help customers save energy and save money

(Philadelphia, Pa. – April 14, 2014) – Beginning this month, PGW is introducing Philadelphia to the newest EnergySense program to help residents stand up for greater home comfort and lower energy costs. The new door-to-door campaign includes discounted home energy assessments, access to significant rebates, detailed information on critical issues in their homes – and what to do about it – and available third-party financing, as low as 0.99 percent.

EnergySense Home Rebates is the newest offering from PGW's EnergySense portfolio – a series of programs designed to help businesses, homeowners and renters save energy and save money.

“Eighty-five percent of homes across America have at least one critical home performance issue that can affect occupant health, safety, comfort and finances,” said Denise Adamucci, vice president of regulatory compliance and customer programs. “PGW's EnergySense Home Rebates program enables customers to address these problem areas, allowing occupants to be more comfortable in their homes year-round while dramatically reducing utility bills, maintenance costs, and other expenses.”

To help introduce EnergySense Home Rebates to the city, PGW joined forces with Mt. Airy USA to host a series of events in April, demonstrating the positive difference that energy efficient upgrades from EnergySense can make on comfort and utility costs.

“At Mt. Airy USA, we work to educate existing homeowners about caring for their homes and building value in them, over time,” said Mt. Airy Homeowner and Executive Director of Mt. Airy USA Anuj Gupta. “Energy efficiency is a vital part of that equation and which is why we decided to partner with PGW in promotion of its EnergySense program. We hope as many homeowners as possible take advantage of this terrific opportunity.”

Last week, Mr. Gupta invited PGW to his home to conduct an energy assessment, which, for an average home can cost $500, but which PGW is offering for only $150.

Last week also saw PGW showcase its EnergySense Home Rebates program at Mt. Airy USA's Home Improvement and Energy Workshop, and demonstrate the program at a Mt. Airy Community Development Corporation meeting and the East Mt. Airy Neighbors monthly board meeting. PGW also visited with the Business Association of Mt. Airy to share information on its equipment rebates and efficient building grants.

The entire PGW EnergySense portfolio, available to homeowners, renters and businesses, is available at www.pgwenergysense.com. Residents looking to schedule an assessment can do so online, or by calling 855-PGW-SOLVES.
